What's for dinner ?

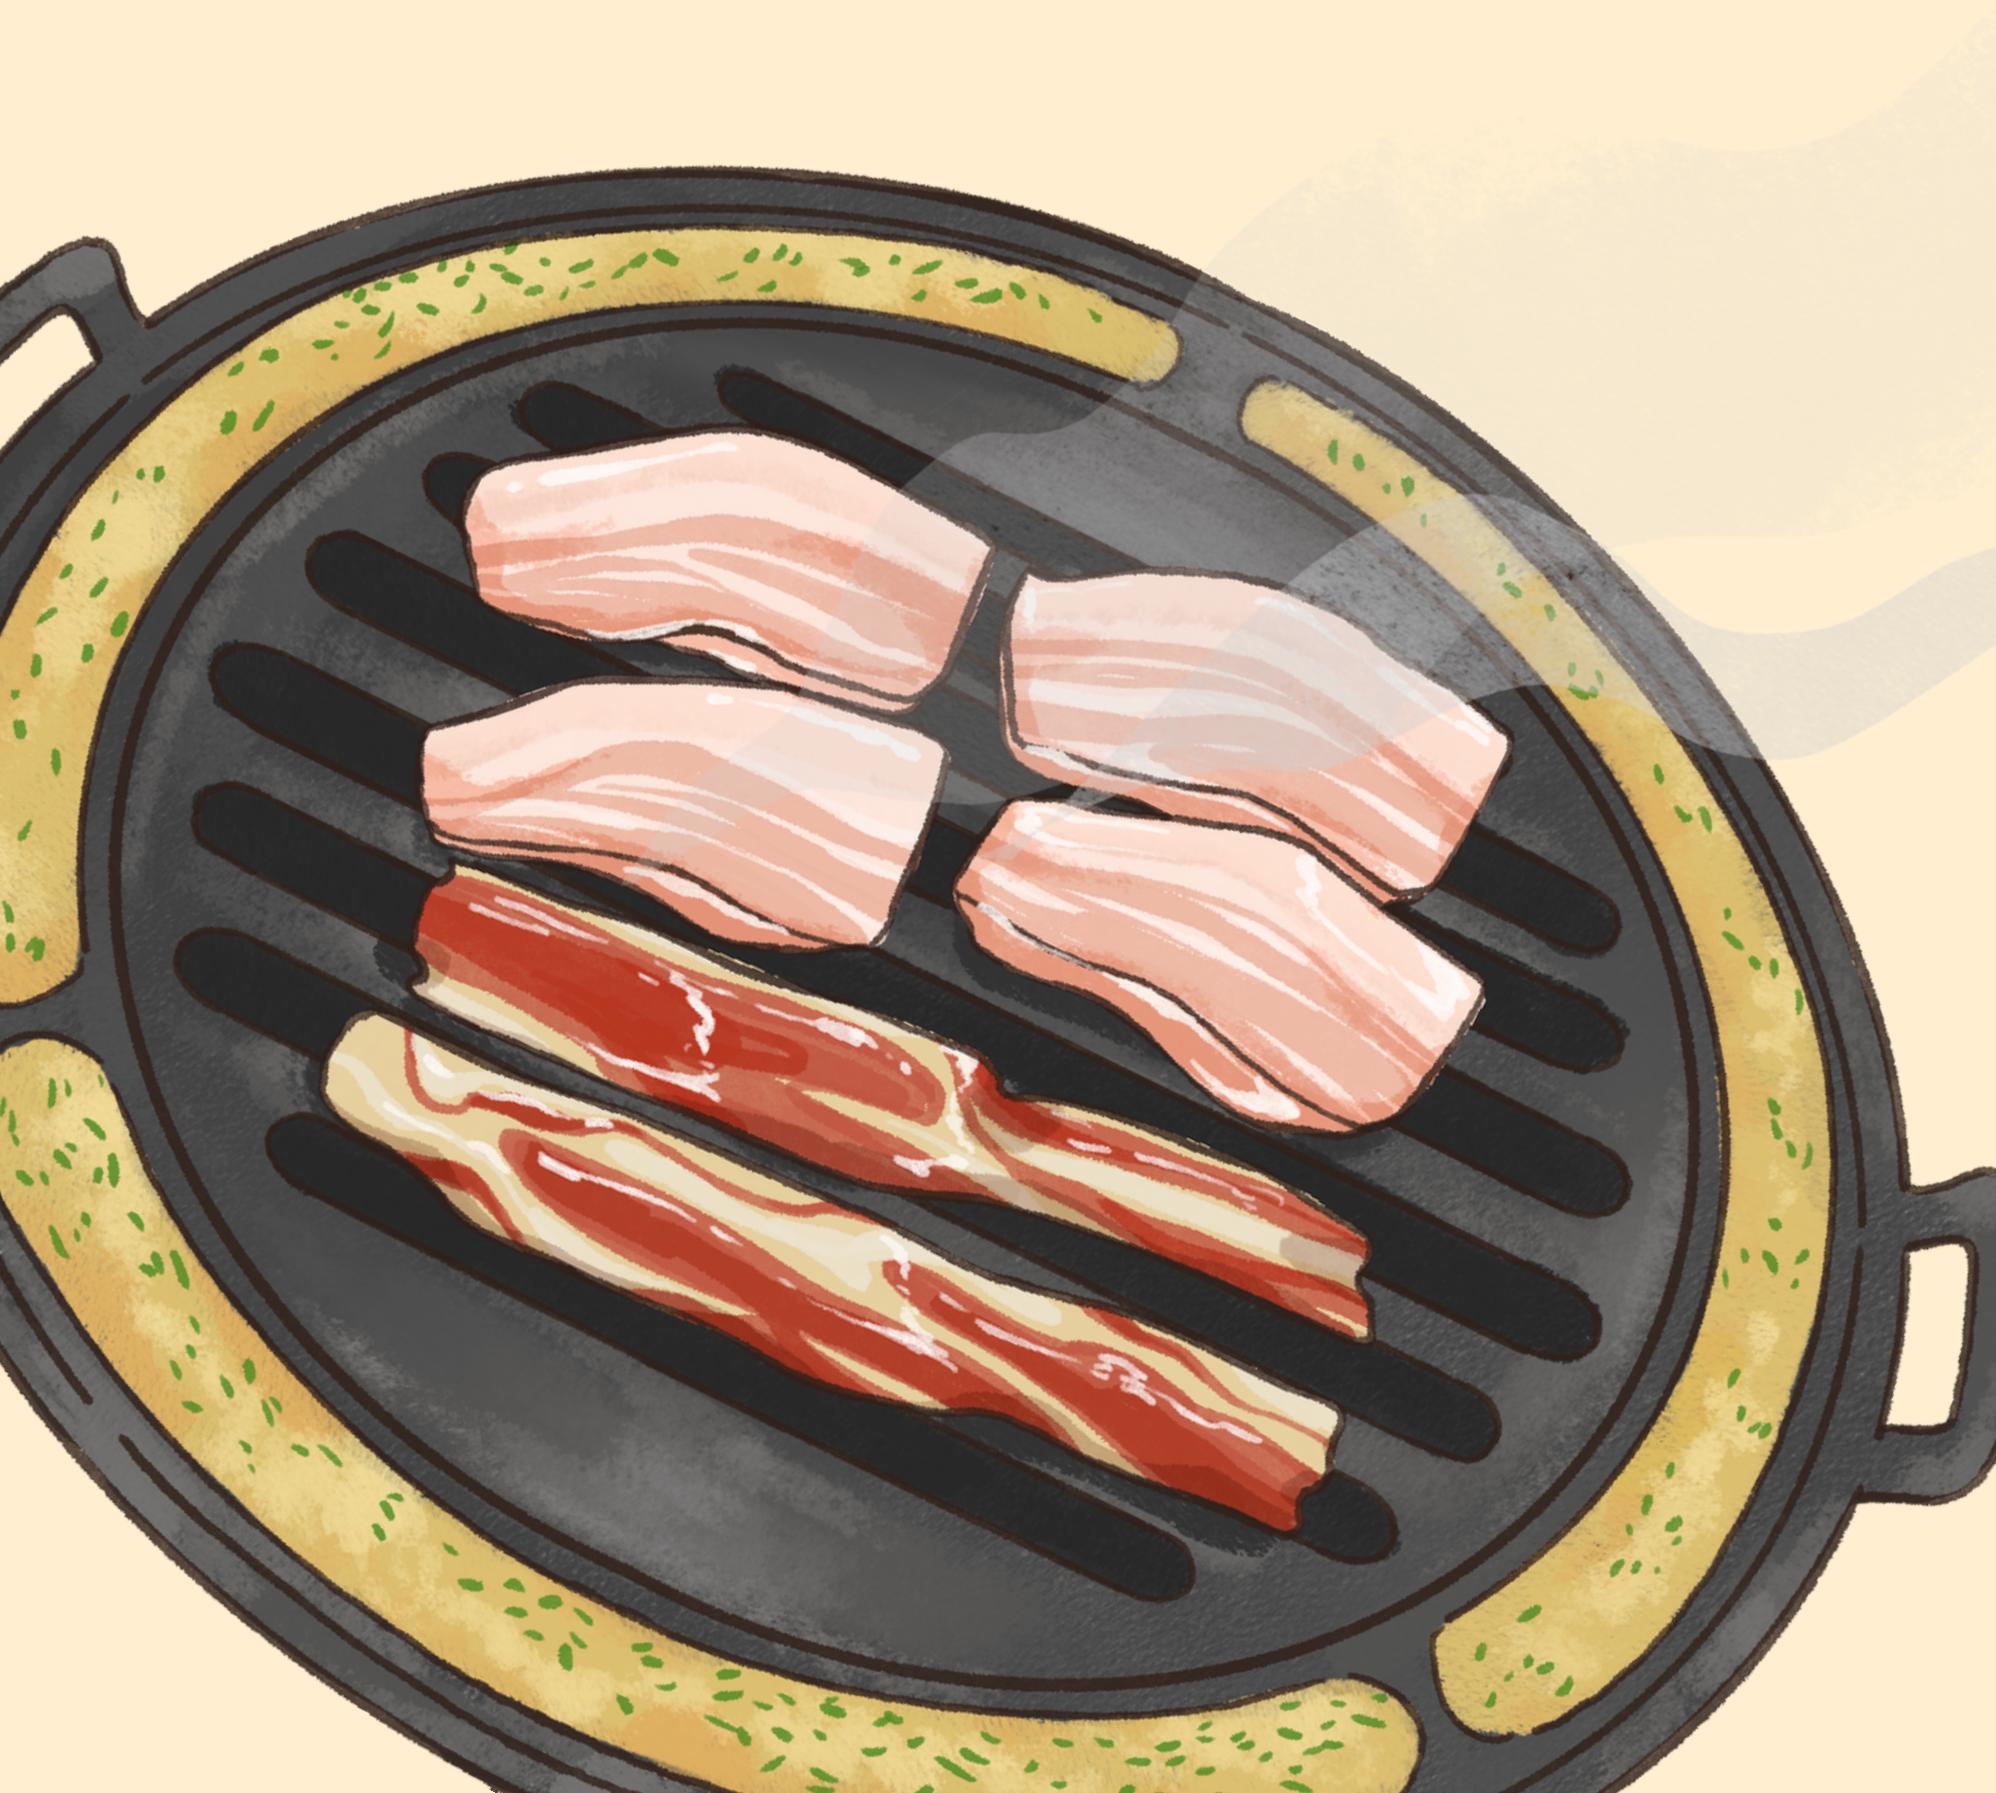

It all starts here

We've all faced this moment of solitude when nothing in your food stocks seems to give any promising dinner perspective.

In an ideal world, you would have the cooking skills and confidence to know exactly what to do with this pasta remainder from yesterday combined the half rotten leeks that have been lying around for a while. But you are out of ideas for an edible alternative...

At this precise moment, you wish you had a chef friend who could give you some ideas to accomodate your needs!

A stylized illustration of a black frying pan containing several strips of bacon. Some bacon is raw and pink, while others are cooked and have a golden-brown, slightly crispy texture. The pan sits on a yellow surface with green speckles, and there are some wispy white lines behind it.

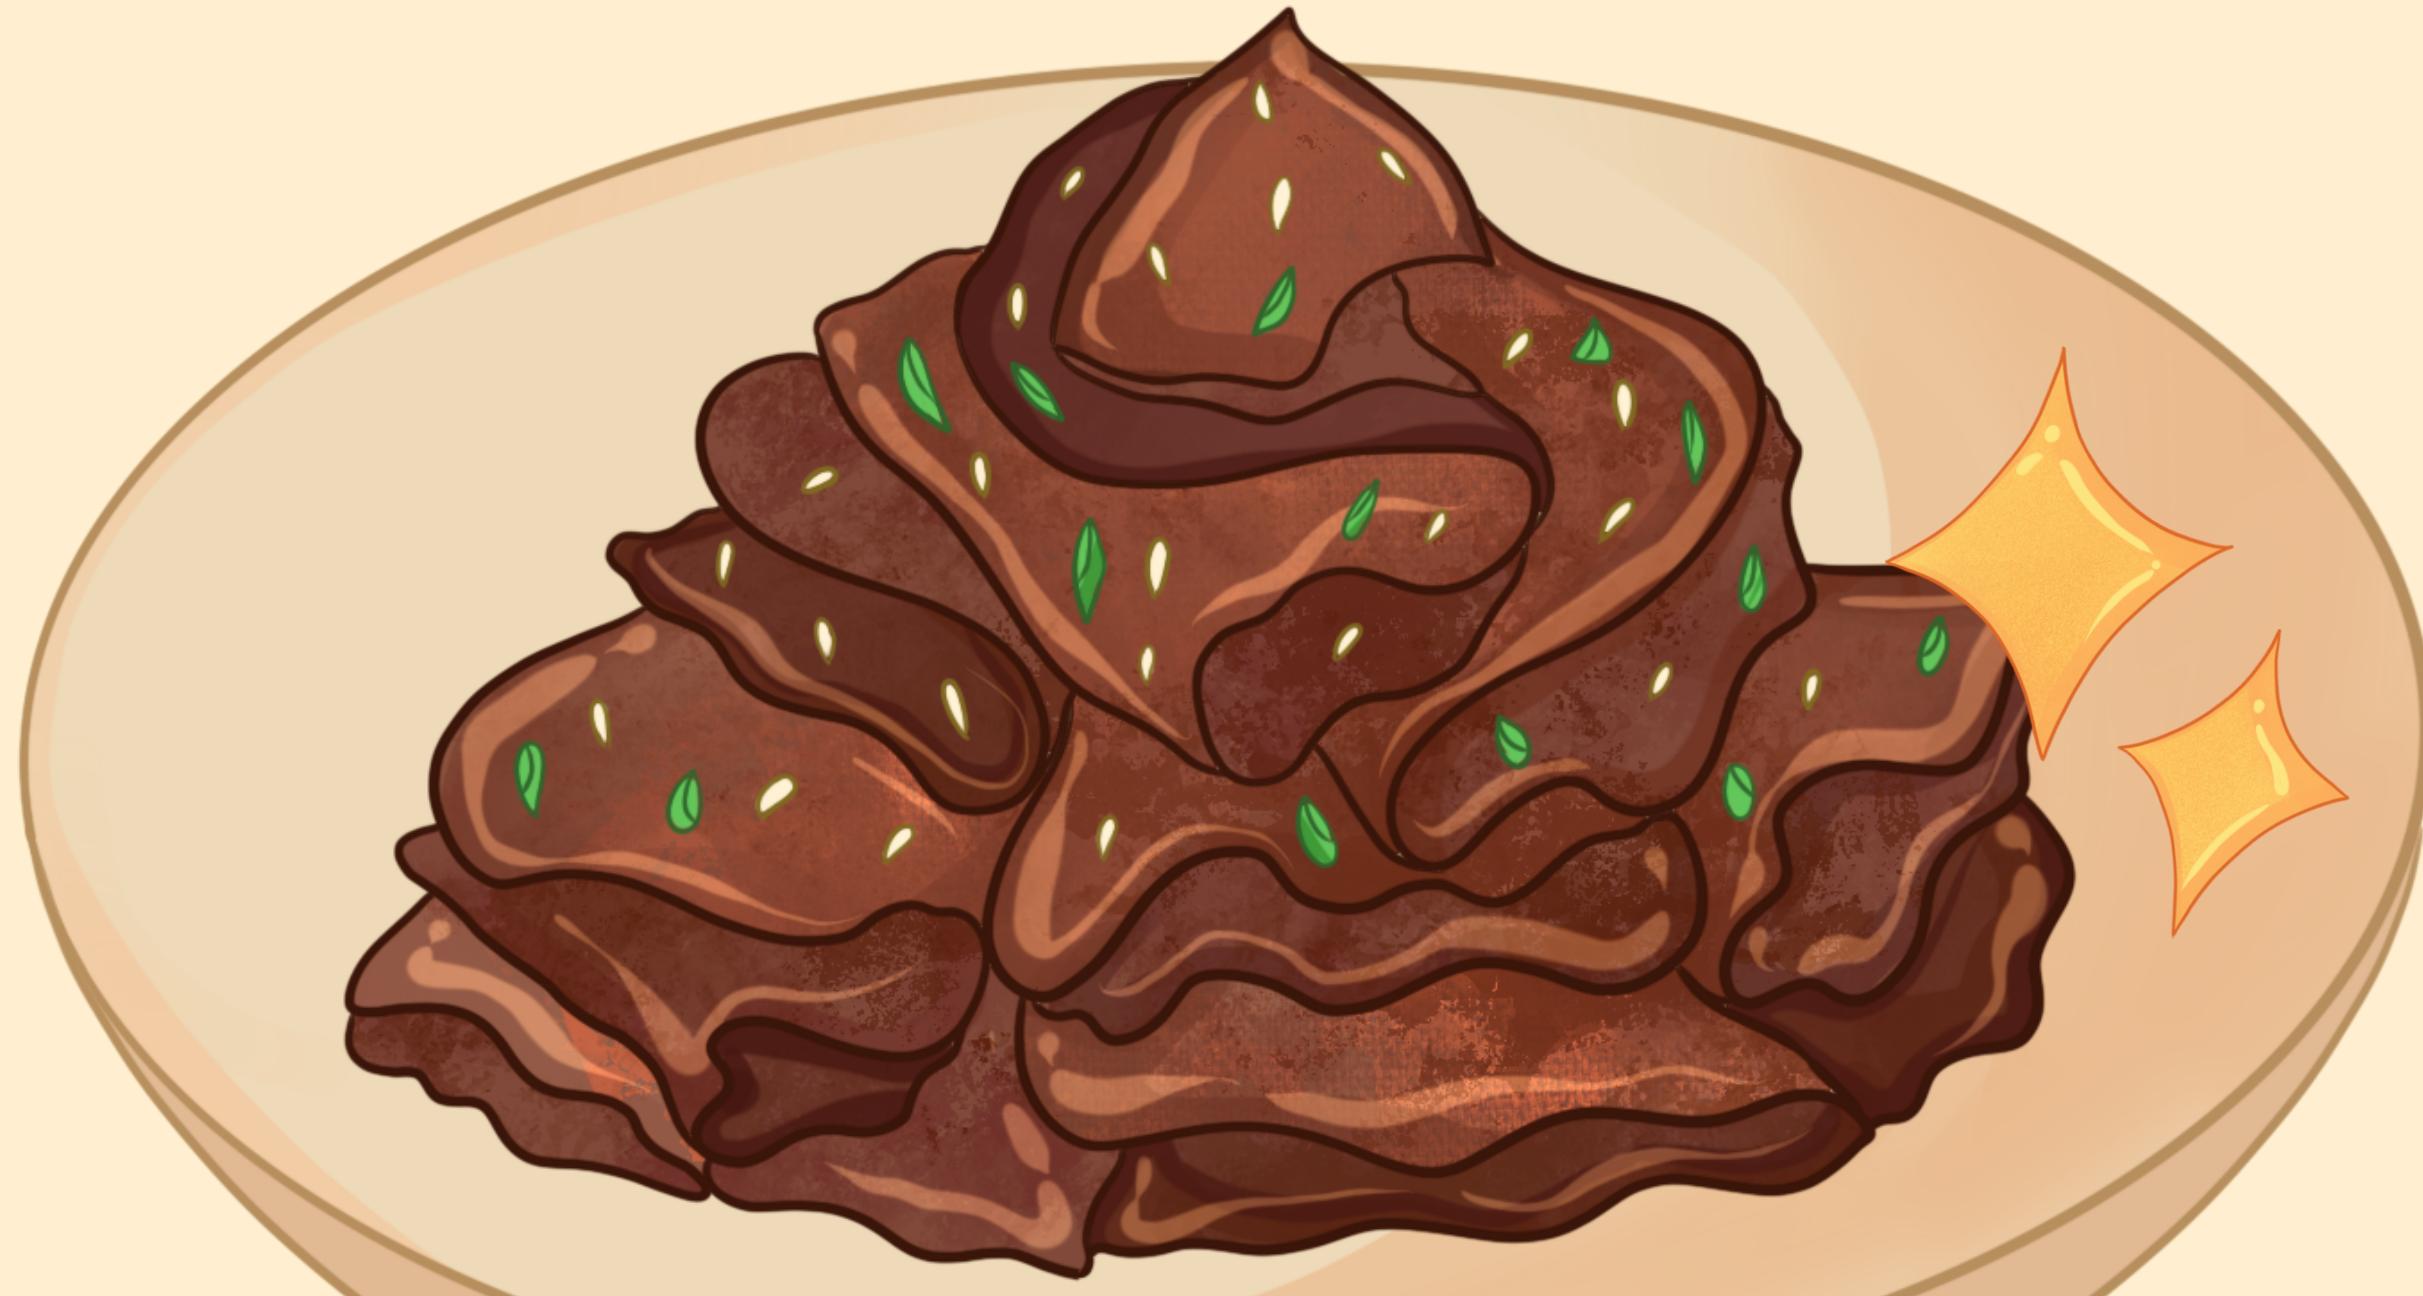

This is where the recipe recommender comes into play
